The Encoding/decoding model of communication was first developed by cultural studies scholar Stuart Hall in 1973. Titled 'Encoding and Decoding in the Television Discourse', Hall's essay offers a theoretical approach of how media messages are produced, disseminated, and interpreted. Hall proposed that audience members can play an active role in decoding messages as they rely on their own ...

Stuart Hall. Four intellectuals established Cultural Studies, namely, Richard Hoggart, Raymond Williams, E.P. Thompson, and Stuart Hall. Hall (b. 1932) has had the lion's share of publicity. Scholars working in this tradition often take their cue from his articles. Hall tells us that he grew up in Jamaica, the "blackest son" (in his words) of a middle-class, conservative family; from an early ...

Hall sin encoding-decoding modell – som er utvikla innafor eit Cultural Studies perspektiv – blei introdusert som eit semiotisk alternativ til den meir lineære kommunikasjonsmodellene (sendar-bodskap-mottakar) som ligg til grunn for den dominerande tradisjonen i publikumsforskninga. Publikum si tolking blir ein føresetnad for at mediebodskap kan ha effekt eller bli brukt: 'Before this ...

This book has some great essays for intro-intermediate cultural studies students, including the seminal Stuart Hall "encoding/decoding" piece. I can't imagine many non-students or academics being all that interested in it, but some of the pieces are written in pretty accessible style. It is, unfortunately, a bit light on feminist and queer cultural studies angles, but still, there's a lot of ...

Stuart Hall's contribution to critical theory and to the study of politics, culture, media, race, diaspora and postcolonialism has been fundamental, hence his thought is difficult to summarise. In line with the "organic intellectual" of Gramsci, for whom knowledge has to be shared beyond the realm of the intellectual, his epistemological posture was embedded within political and public ...
